

Jamal and the night visitors

Isabella, 46, is the HR superintendent at the Nzoia Sugar Company in western Kenya. Jamal, 11, is her third and youngest child. For years, malaria made their lives a nightmare. Jamal was born a weak child, and was allergic to milk from the beginning. He was six months old when he suffered his first malaria attack, and from then on, was frequently ill with the mosquito-borne fever. Jamal was a very playful child. But right in the middle of a game, he would suddenly start to have a stomach ache and then a headache, Isabella says. The malaria attacked him every two weeks so he often had to go into hospital. This went on for a number of years.
